

Contents

Foreword	xiii
Preface	xv

Introduction

0.1.	The Purpose of the Study, and the Significance of the Laṅkāvatāra-sūtra within Buddhist Doctrinal History	1
0.2.	Dating the Text: Problems of Form and Interpretation	13
0.3.	Methodology and Outline of the Study	23

Part One: Concepts of Being

1.0.	The Nature of Buddhist Ontology General considerations • The practical aim of the Yogācāra Philosophy	39
1.1.	The Threefold Meaning of Tathāgata-garbha and its Relation to Ālaya-vijñāna: the Essence of Being Preliminary considerations • Tathāgata-garbha as essential, supramundane, pure dharma, and its contrast with the Hindu Ātman • Tathāgata-garbha as embryo, and the dynamics of Buddhahood • Tathāgata-garbha as womb or matrix of Buddhahood • Conclusion	51

- 1.2. The Five Skandhas: the Temporal Manifestation of Being 79
- Introduction • Brief overview of the Ātman controversy prior to the Laṅkāvatāra-sūtra • Rūpa, or the formative elements of the five Skandhas • Nāma, or the formless elements of the five Skandhas • The Skandhas and the empirical self, or personality • The Skandhas and the trans-empirical Self, the Tathāgata • The five Skandhas and the denial of metaphysical dualities • Concluding remarks on the notion of Self and its varieties
- 1.3. Dharmadhātu: the Spatial or Cosmic Dimension of Being 117
- Introductory remarks • Dharmadhātu as cosmic Law: the fundamental structure of the universe • Dharmadhātu as universal Void: the ground of Being • Concluding observations

Part Two: Concepts of Knowing

- 2.0. Buddhist Epistemology, Buddhist Dialectics 135
- Truth, untruth, half-truth, "the truth" • The tetralemma logic: a thousand years of Buddhist dialectics • The early use of the tetralemma in the Pāli canon • Rationality and irrationality in Nāgārjuna's relativistic logic • Epistemology in the Laṅkāvatāra-sūtra: a radical critique of language, logic, and knowledge • Conclusions and preview of part two
- 2.1. The Epistemological Reduction of the Citta-mātra (Mind-only) Doctrine 169
- Preliminary considerations • Citta as the empirical mind • Citta as the transcendental Mind • Citta-mātra as explanation for the triple world (Tribhava) • Concluding words and the connection between Laṅkāvatāra and Zen

2.2.	From Mind to No-mind: the Transcendental Leap beyond Empirical Cognition	209
	Introduction • The five Dharmas or epistemic categories • The three Svabhāvas or modes of cognition • The attainment of Āryajñāna: transcendental Wisdom or Gnosis • Concluding remarks
2.3.	The Conjunctive System of the Eight Vijñānas: the Integration of Both Mind and No-mind States of Consciousness	237
	Introductory remarks • Jñāna and Vijñāna: abstract intuition versus concrete knowledge • Khyāti- and Vastuprativikalpa-vijñāna: the perceptual and the object-discriminating knowledge • The inner revolution (Parāvṛtti): the return to the tranquil state of pure consciousness (Ālaya-vijñāna) • Conclusion
2.4.	The Disjunctive Theory of Causation: Things are Neither this, Nor that, for They Are All Subject to Causes and Conditions (Hetu-pratyaya)	261
	Introduction • The expansion of the relevance of causation: from the psychological to the cosmic-philosophical principle • Causation as a possible theoretical basis for a monistic view of the world • Causation as a teaching device • Excursus : highlighting Nāgārjuna's thought in respect to causation • The soteriological value of the theory of causation • Concluding observations
3.0.	Final Overview	287
	Appendix	295
	Notes	323
	Bibliography	357
	Index	365