

Contents

|          |                                                                                |           |
|----------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------|
| 1 | Introduction: What May the Future Hold?                                 | 1  |
|          | Constance de Saint-Laurent, Sandra Obradović, and Kevin R. Carriere     |           |
|          | Section I Imagining the Future                                          | 13 |
| 2 | Imagining the Collective Future: A Sociocultural Perspective            | 15 |
|          | Tania Zittoun and Alex Gillespie                                        |           |
| 3 | Framing the Issue: Literature, Collective Imagination, and Fan Activism | 39 |
|          | Kevin R. Carriere                                                       |           |
| 4 | Thinking Through Time: From Collective Memories to Collective Futures   | 59 |
|          | Constance de Saint-Laurent                                              |           |

|                                                       |                                                                                                 |            |
|-------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| 5                                              | Perspectival Collective Futures: Creativity and Imagination in Society                   | 83  |
|                                                       | Vlad Petre Glăveanu                                                                      |            |
| Section II    Collective Imaginations          |                                                                                                 | 107 |
| 6                                              | Imagining Collective Futures in Time: Prolepsis and the Regimes of Historicity           | 109 |
|                                                       | Ignacio Brescó de Luna                                                                   |            |
| 7                                              | Utopias and World-Making: Time, Transformation and the Collective Imagination            | 129 |
|                                                       | Sandra Jovchelovitch and Hana Hawlina                                                    |            |
| 8                                              | Troubled Pasts, Collective Memory, and Collective Futures                                | 153 |
|                                                       | Cristian Tileagă                                                                         |            |
| 9                                              | Imagining Collective Identities Beyond Intergroup Conflict                               | 173 |
|                                                       | Cathy Nicholson and Caroline Howarth                                                     |            |
| Section III    Creating Socio-Political Change |                                                                                                 | 197 |
| 10                                             | Creating Alternative Futures: Cooperative Initiatives in Egypt                           | 199 |
|                                                       | Eman A. Maarek and Sarah H. Awad                                                         |            |
| 11                                             | Remembering and Imagining in Human Development: Fairness and Social Movements in Ireland | 221 |
|                                                       | Séamus A. Power                                                                          |            |

|           |                                                                              |            |
|-----------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| 12 | Creating Integration: A Case Study from Serbiaand the EU         | 237 |
|           | Sandra Obradović                                                      |            |
| 13 | History Education and the (Im)possibility of Imaginingthe Future | 255 |
|           | Mario Carretero                                                       |            |
| 14 | Conclusion: Changing Imaginings of Collective Futures                 | 273 |
|           | Ivana Marková                                                         |            |
|           | Index                                                                 | 295 |