

Index

Acknowledgements.....	3
List of Illustrations	7
Glossary and Abbrevations	11
Introduction	13
1. The Ituri forest – approaching the field.....	23
1.1 A social and natural space.....	23
The forest environment and population	23
Pygmies? Villagers?	39
1.2 Field research and the past	49
Methodology and sources.....	49
Challenges of doing fieldwork in the Ituri forest.....	55
2. Rubber, roads and resettlement: Colonial policies in the Ituri forest.....	61
2.1 Ivory and rubber: Zanzibari traders and King Léopold's Congo Free State (1885–1908).....	61
Precolonial agricultural practices and settlement patterns.....	61
Zanzibari traders' control of the forest.....	63
Arrival of the Europeans: King Léopold's incorporation of north-eastern Congo.....	65
2.2 Imposed cultivation and a new order in the Ituri forest: Belgian Congo (1908–1960).....	73
Compulsory cultivation and paysannat indigène	74
In between: Chiefs as part of the colonial system	82
Ethnicity, resettlements and control	86
2.3 Opening up the Ituri forest.....	89
The long march: Caravan tracks and imposed portage.....	90
The red line in the forest: Construction of motor roads.....	95
3. Exploration and representation: The quest for “the little people” and the okapi	99
3.1 The Mbuti as objects of exoticism in Europe	100
Early encounters and Henry Morton Stanley's forest “dwarfs”	100
Examined and photographed: The first Mbuti in Europe.....	102
Kidnapped and on stage: James J. Harrison's Mbuti in England and Germany (1905–1906).....	104
3.2 Collecting, categorising and exhibiting the okapi.....	108
Stanley's and Johnston's mysterious Ituri forest donkey	108
Indispensable Mbuti: The race to hunt okapis for museums.....	110
The striped forest resource as a sensation in zoos	118
4. Between measuring and romanticising: Ethnographers in the colonial Ituri forest	126
4.1 Paul Schebesta: 1929–1930, 1934–1935, 1949–1950, 1954–1955	126
Wilhelm Schmidt and the Pygmäenproblem	126
Paul Schebesta's and Martin Gusinde's field research	128
Schebesta's revised views on Schmidt's theories	135
4.2 Patrick Putnam: A life in the Ituri forest 1931–1953	136
From Harvard anthropologist to colonial agent sanitaire	136
Camp Putnam and growing tourism.....	140
Illness, destruction and death of an Ituri forest character	146

4.3 Colin Turnbull: 1951, 1954, 1957–1958, 1970–1972	149
From tourist to social anthropologist	150
Turnbull's framework: Dualism and independence	153
Garden of Eden: Turnbull's romanticisation of the Mbuti	155
5. "Our Mbuti don't respect us anymore": Decay, immigration and changing relations	162
5.1 Postcolonial socio-economic crisis	162
Independence (1960) and Simba rebellion (1964–1965)	162
Decay and reversion to subsistence under Mobutu (1965–1997)	167
Rebels, minerals and the resurgence of the heart of darkness: The Congo wars (1996–2003)	174
5.2 Land, gold and opportunities: Migration from the highlands to the Ituri forest	188
Demographic issues and historical patterns of migration	188
Following the forest road: Nande traders and gold mining	192
Kumba-kumba and road rehabilitation	200
5.3 Mbuti day labour for immigrant farmers	206
Immigrants' agriculture in the Ituri forest	206
Parjour : Mbuti day labour on immigrants' fields	217
Immigrants as Mbuti's new patrons?	227
6. "The hunting net feeds the family": Mbuti hunting in a changing forest	235
6.1 Mbuti net-hunting	235
Mukila : The hunting net	235
Together we hunt: Coordination between women and men	243
Duiker antelopes and other caught animals	266
6.2 Different regions, different Mbuti hunting techniques	270
The archers: Bow-and-arrow hunting	270
Why do different hunting techniques exist in the Ituri forest?	271
Hunting with spears and snares and the myth of elephant hunting	275
6.3 Mbuti hunting and nature conservation	282
Nature conservation in the Congo	282
"The white people's forest": The Okapi wildlife reserve	285
Mbuti hunting in the Okapi wildlife reserve	294
7. Mbuti forest hunting camps as market places	298
7.1 Entering the forest	298
Setting off and the 'tax' to conduct trade	298
Staying in the forest hunting camp	304
The return of the hunters	310
7.2 Meat exchanges and debts	314
Offers and exchange rates	314
Meat trading: A precarious livelihood	327
Debts and sanctions	332
7.3 Changing meat-exchange dynamics in the Ituri forest	338
Postcolonial commercialisation of hunting	340
Gold mining and road access as accelerators of meat trade	343
A dwindling forest meat resource base	345
Conclusion: The Ituri forest as a contested space and a space of contestation	348
Bibliography	361